

Artist statement

My visual story telling is rooted in a South Asian feminist perspective and my practice centers on the female body. Finding context in history, I am particularly interested in art historical and archival images and texts. The current body of work is a series of paintings on canvas and wasli, in response to found photographs of racial, ontological and ethnographic documentation of South Asian women by British colonists.

For me, written in the subtext of these images is violence—violence through detached and imposed observation, exoticization and erasure of identities and personal histories. Spoken for and hostage to a controlling gaze, the women had no voice in how they were seen. They were, thus, misrepresented, dehumanized and objectified, reflected in their unease and vacant gaze as they posed for the white man behind the camera.

The staged photographs with exoticized women in neoclassical poses and artificial Victorian backgrounds and props served the colonial ideological agenda, satisfied European demand for exoticism and helped lure Western men to the subcontinent as a haven for sex.

For the works on canvas, I have used photographs of my grandmother. They represent a South Asian woman from the same era who was fierce and formidable in her strength and vulnerable and fallible in her humanness. They, thus, serve as a contrast to the denial of individuality, autonomy and agency in the colonial images.

The works on wasli are an attempt at decolonizing and reimagining the colonial images to reclaim the personhood and history of the women represented. Decontextualizing them from the original historical context of the 'Oriental' woman, I try to lend them a South Asian female gaze, language and expression.

The work, thus, redefines and offers a counterpoint to colonial histories, narratives and archival practices. The aim is to revisit the legacy of looking at ourselves through the eyes of the colonists and reframe the past and the future.

Profile

Farazeh Syed (b. 1971) is a Lahore based multi-disciplinary visual and performing artist working across the mediums of painting, printmaking, textile art and music. Her figurative compositions draw upon and evoke her deeply felt observations of her own experience of womanhood and the lives of women around her. She brings to her practice a deep understanding of social and artistic concerns, deepened by her study of literature. Farazeh's knowledge of the connections between the visual and performing arts, imbues her work with unusual nuance as do the narratives emerging from her study of fiction and poetry. Being a music practitioner plays into the kind of rhythms her work employs and lends it an individual quality. Her practice challenges the art historical narrative surrounding women and their bodies as well as prescribed notions of gender and sexuality.

After completing two years of the foundation program at National College of Arts, Farazeh went on to acquire a diploma in print making at Gandhara Art College, Islamabad. Inspired by the Ustad-Shagird relationship, she trained with renowned painter Iqbal Hussain for over fifteen years, where she learnt painting and an acute understanding of the human form, subsequently, refining her own visual and conceptual vocabulary. Syed also attended Continuing Education courses in painting and drawing at Parsons and Art Students League in New York. She has been involved in art teaching through formal studio classes, lectures, critiques and talks.

Farazeh received her MA (Hons.) in Visual Arts from National College of Arts, where she has also served as Associate Professor, Fine Arts (Visiting Faculty), and her MA in Education (Gold Medal) from Beaconhouse National University, where she has taught Academic Writing and Critical Reading. Farazeh has been trained in South Asian Classical vocal music and has performed on several platforms. Her connection with music lends her work rhythm and a certain lyricism in the way she connects that can be experienced as subtle sensations. As a Research Associate at Sanjan Nagar Institute of Art and Philosophy, Syed has researched extensively on Classical music, written academic papers and lectured on South Asian Classical Music and Cultural history at National College of Arts, Musicology Department.

Farazeh has exhibited her work extensively in prominent international shows and local galleries and her work is in the collection of eminent national and international collectors. She has attended several art residencies and was awarded merit grant for artists' residency at The Vermont Studio Centre in 2020. Farazeh was also nominated for the 2021 Sovereign Asian Art Prize and was one of the interview finalists for the Lakshmi Mittal Visiting Artist Fellowship at Harvard University. Her work has been featured in several international and local art and literary journals. Her recent shows include her solo Madar, Mater, Mataram, 2024, Canvas Gallery, Karachi; and group shows Before Meets After 2023, The Upside Space, Singapore; The Body & Beyond, 2022, Lahore Biennale Foundation; and Aberzanaan, 2022, Afghanistan.
